Elsa is 33 years old, and she is now a mother of a daughter and a son. Before she got married, Elsa was a chef at a French restaurant. She is an excellent cook and can make many delicious recipes.

Her two children are now in school and sometimes she wonders how she will live a life: as a housewife or as a part-time worker.

Last month, a friend Sally, who owns a cooking school, asked Elsa to teach a weekly class there. Elsa has never taught anyone to cook before, but she is going to take the job because she thinks it will be interesting.

Now she gives a lecture at a cooking school once a week on Wednesday. On that day, after her children leave for school, she eats breakfast and leaves home at nine. The cooking school begins at ten thirty and lasts for ninety minutes. At noon, they begin to eat what they've cooked and at one o'clock in the afternoon her lesson time ends.

She is now busy planning what to teach and how to teach it. After each lesson, she talks about it with Sally and decides what to cook the next week.

Until the next lesson, she often cooks the dish at home and checks the cooking process. If it is not easy enough, she changes the recipe a few times. Also, her son helps her a lot with the flavor. He likes delicious food and tells her which dish is better. After some trial and error, she makes the final plan for how to cook each weekly dish.
